EDITOR'S NOTE

On March 26, 2004, the Frederick K. Cox International Law Center and the Center for Law, Technology, and the Arts cosponsored an exciting symposium at Case Western Reserve University School of Law that examined the importance of international relations in understanding and shaping the future of international intellectual property law. Published in this issue are articles written by some of the individuals who presented topics at the symposium.

This is the first publishing effort of the 2004-2005 editorial board and it was an exciting fall season of collaboration and learning. This issue represents the hard work, energy, and teamwork of thirty-one students and each Journal member takes pride in presenting this issue to our subscribers.

We could not have published this issue without the help of our advisor, Dean Hiram Chodosh, whose sharp intelligence and vision guides us in our work. We would also like to thank Alice Simon and Nancy Pratt Kantor for their tireless efforts to keep the Journal running in an organized and professional manner. A special thanks is also owed to Professor Peter M. Gerhart who worked very hard to organize the March 2004 symposium, and who provided tremendous insight into the publication of this issue.

Finally, I would like to thank the contributing authors for their hard work and dedication to studying the exciting topics raised at the symposium and presented in this issue.
